HE THINKS IT HAS A FUTURE.

General Counsel Harmon Satisfied That Alamogordo Will Continue to Prosper as It Has in the Past.

Benjamin S. Harmon and wife, of New York City, arrived in Alamogordo last week. They will remain here until some time in February, enjoying the health giving qualities of this salubrious winter climate. Mr. Harmon is at the head of the prominent law firm, Harmon & Mathewson, of 40 Wall street, and is also general counsel for all the companies operating here. Asked concerning the object of his trip, Mr. Harmon said to a News representative:

"I came out to New Mexico from health and business reasons commingled. In 1897 I drove with a prospecting party from San Antonio, on the Santa Fe railway, across the county to White Oaks and from that place to El Paso, and had an opportunity to judge the boasted climatic resources of the region. Naturally I was decidedly impressed, and when my health became impaired from continuous office work, I concluded that an open winter here would prove beneficial."

"Have you any thing to say relative to the plans of the E. P. & N. E. and Rock Island?" was asked.

"Not for present publication. En route here I stopped a week in Chicago on that business and will now have more or less work to do here in connection with the extension."

"Alamogordo is quite a surprise to me. It seems wonderful that in such a short space of time, since my first trip across these plains, a bustling community, backed by so many solid enterprises should have sprung into existence. The town seems to combine in a very unique way the comfort of older communities with the brightness and freedom of the frontier. The facilities for the transaction of business, the opportunities for enjoyment and the splendid appointments for the comfort of residents and visitors, are far in advance of the growth of the place, and they present a very laudable condition indeed. With the development of the enterprises which have fixed on this place as their headquarters, and which they are bound to favor, the steady and rapid growth of the town is assured. When a northern connection is made, the upbuilding will naturally be more rapid and the volume of business will probably increase to more than double its present status. The outside contribution to the commerce of the place at this time will be augmented by the interests of hundreds of large concerns now unthought of, and those which are now working here, will be forced to increase their capacity to keep pace with the growth of their business incident to the opening of a new market."

"So far as the climate is concerned, I am indeed charmed with it, and have no hesitancy in saying that, to me, the air seems even softer and certainly more invigorating than the climate of El Paso. I am in love with the surroundings, and heartily gratified with my choice of a winter home."

Harmon is equally well pleased with Alamogordo and its environment and does not regret the change from the whirl of city social functions to the quiet of a smaller community. Both Mr. and Mrs. Harmon are charming people in every respect, and they have already gained the friendship and thorough respect of every person in the community.
